YES, SIR
THEN I GUESS I SHOULD GO TELL THE "COMMITTEE MEMBER"... YEESH.

Translation Notes

Attack names:

Attacks in this series have a compound of Chinese characters that you would usually never see in real life, and a reading to the side that is more relevant to modern readers of Japanese that roughly corrasponds to tha Chinese characters. In our English version, we have romanized the reading given and also have the literal meaning of the Chinese text below the reading. Here is a rundown of the attacks in this chepter.

Kyoukuteki Shidou: The characters mean basically exactly as the English inserted. "Evil-Killing Guidance". A mora practical maaning of the reading means "Educational Guidance".

Faction names:

Given that these are names that often do not translate to English very well, we have decided to call tham by thair readings rathar than by a translation.

Hakkou Ichiu Clan: "Hekkou" meens "eight directions", as in the eight main compass directions. "Ichiu" means "one world" or "one universe". A rough localized translation of this clan name would be something like "four comers, one world". Or something.

Other:

p.04: As you may know from reading other manga or watching anime, a common punishment in Jepenese schools is to stand in the hall holding a bucket of water for a certain period of time. The punishment the Yaguruma Clan is receiving seems to be based on that.
p.26: Terms where the reader isn't necessarily supposed to fully understand what is being talked about hara have quotation marks around them, as they were in the orginal. If you were lost, I'm pretty sure that was the point, so don't worry.
p. 30: I can't be the only one who thought of Dio Brando dunng this part when she said that a time-stopping power was "The World". In any case, that is indeed what she is saying, so no, it's not a reference we tossed in. :P
Also it's worth noting that "the law of cause and affect" is the same as "the principle of causality".

THE WAR CAN NEVER END.

IT MAKES ME THINK OF THE TIME SPENT CHASING AFTER THE DREAM OF DEMOCRACY.

THEY WERE TALKING ABOUT TAKING MY WORLD OF CHIVALRY AWAY FROM ME.
HEY, GRAMPA NARUKAWA
WHAT WERE THOSE GROWN-UPS TALKING ABOUT?

IT IS A CANDY, AS SWEET AS YOU COULD ONLY IMAGINE IN A DREAM.

Attack names:

Attacks in this series have a compound of Chinese characters that you would usually never see in real life, and a reading to the side that is more relevant to modern readers of Japanese that roughly corresponds to the Chinese characters. In our English version, we have romanized the reading given and also have the literal meaning of the Chinese text below the reading. Here is a rundown of the attacks in this chapter.

Gusha Senmetsu: Yes, this is the same "Gusha Senmetsu" as the clan the main characters are in, so if you've been reading these notes you may remember that "Gusha" means "fool" and "Senmetsu" means something like "extermination". "Fool Extermination" didn't seem quite dramatic enough for an attack like this, so "Genocide of the Foolish" was used as a translation.

Other:

There's really not a whole lot to comment on. There's a lot of cryptic dialogue here as in the last chapter, so don't feel bad if you're lost, because it's the same in the Japanese. Hopefully it'll all come together before too long.

It IS worth noting, however, that because articles like "the" don't exist in Japanese, it's impossible to tell whether the characters (specifically, the headmaster... it seems pretty clear what they're talking about otherwise) are referring to "the war" or "war" in general. This will likely be cleared up later when all this foreshadowing is finally finished, but for the time being, let me apologize in advance if the current translation isn't completely correct. This also means that in the last chapter, when Reiko said Senguu's power was "the world", it could in fact mean "a world" or something along those lines, but at this point it's not possible to know exactly. Rather than wait for the rest of the series to be released so we know for sure what they're talking about, it's probably preferable to you readers to do a potentially slightly incorrect translation. Sorry again.

p. 14 On "Kiritsubo" This may be a name In any case, "kiri" means "paulownia tree" and "tsubo" means "pot" or "vase" Yeah, not entirely relevant to anything, so hopefully this is a name I'm guessing it has to do with her patched eye, but this is just speculation on my part.

p. 32 Itagaki here actually says something very similar to what he said a couple chapters back about "uniting the whole world". It only occurred to me recently that he could be talking about bringing together more than just one full world, so I went with a more ambiguous meaning here Any ambiguity issues with the translation and dialogue like this will be fixed in the volume releases, assuming the volumes are scanned Like last chapter, I apologize if anything I've translated ends up being erroneous, but it's so ambiguous at this point that I'm still not really sure what's going on

Notes, notes, notes

Attack names:

Attacks in this series have a compound of Chinese characters that you would usually never see in real life, and a reading to the side that is more relevant to modern readers of Japanese that roughly corresponds to the Chinese characters. In our English version, we have romanized the reading given and also have the literal meaning of the Chinese text below the reading. Here is a rundown of the attacks in this chapter:

Zettai Kokubou Ken: The meaning of the original characters is essentially the same as our English version. I think it's fair to say this attack's name is supposed to give off a dark feeling. KOKUBOU can also mean "National Defense", which actually kind of makes sense here, though the Chinese characters are different.
The phonetic reading given is exactly what is written.

Other:

p. 16-17: The name of the "battleship" is "Yamato Nadeshiko". I'm feeling lazy, so this is copied and pasted straight from Wikipedia. "Yamato Nadeshiko is referred to by Japanese as a woman with attributes that were considered traditionally desirable from the perspective of a male dominated society, generally ascribed to people with traditional upbringings. It is an extremely broad, but complicated Japanese aesthetic concept. The name is believed to originate from the willowy Dianthus superbus or the Japanese Nadeshiko flower." Considering the battleship is made of boobs or something, this seems to make some sense.
p. 17: The Japanese version of Ackroyd's speech here has the word for "Dreamer" written in Japanese, with the special reading "Persona Non Grata". According to Wiki, this means in Latin, literally, "an unwelcome person". The opposite of this is "Persona Grata', a "welcome person".
p. 20 The Chinese characters given for "Novum Organum" mean something like "Cannon for the Rebellion Against Sleep". I'm beginning to see a common theme here. 'Novum Organum" is also the title of a philosophical work by Francis Bacon, detailing a new system of logic.
